History Comes Alive Morgan's "No Greater Gift"

No Greater Gift by Teresa H. Morgan Releases

WHITE SALMON, Wash., April 25, 2016 — Debut author Teresa H. Morgan releases contemporary inspirational World War II mystery, No Greater Gift, on May 1, 2016. Morgan ties together history of World War II from a non-Nazi German's perspective with the contemporary themes of domestic abuse, familial betrayal, forgiveness, and reconciliation.

History professor Grace Ryan moves back to her hometown expecting to help her grandmother turn old WWII journals into memoirs. Instead, Grace arrives to find Gramma Annie being loaded into an ambulance where the last thing her grandmother whispers to her is a suspicion of treason. While God's voice seems silent, He sends Erik Petersson, Gramma Annie's neighbor and a physicist on sabbatical, to help her sort fact from fiction amid an increasingly fragile family bond. Together, both recovering from fractured relationships, Erik and Grace set out to discover the truth--no matter the cost.

Grace Ryan stands a relatable and endearing heroine as she seeks to step past the trauma from abuse and the growing condemnation from her family for her choices. No Greater Gift provides great study material for women's groups on responding to a shame-slinging world with godly endurance and conviction--even when that shame-slinging world is from other professing Christians. Morgan has written a historically-solid piece of literature that takes a fresh angle on the civil conflict from the perspective of the Allies during World War II. Morgan creates an excellent starting point for beginner historians and historical fiction readers, making No Greater Gift excellent for museum gift shops, libraries, independent book stores and more.

About Teresa H. Morgan In the days of carbon paper and eraser shields, Teresa Morgan worked as secretary to a manager and twenty-one engineers and scientists at the Department of Energy's Hanford Site.
